

Sorry—I can't talk...

I'm taking part in a voluntary Day of Silence for the Springville Students for Human Rights.

We want to raise understanding and empathy for the 56 million girls around the world who are deprived of an education.

In order to understand them better, for the next twenty four hours, I've agreed to go without talking, using the computer, cell phone, television, or radio. It's a hard thing to do, and I'll need your help supporting me.

If you're interested, I'll gladly accept any money you could offer in pledges—whether it's any loose change you might have, or a dollar or two. Any small amount would quickly add up in a big way. Anything we collect will go toward the School of Leadership Afghanistan, a non-profit boarding school for future female leaders in Kabul.

So thanks—and I'll talk with you tomorrow!
